

The new Charter of the Girl's Rights

Each girl and adolescent has the right:

Article 1

To be protected and treated justly by family, school, employers - also in relation to parenting needs - by health and social services and by community.

Article 2

To be safeguarded against any form of physical or psychological violence, exploitation, sexual abuse and the constriction of cultural practices which could disturb her psychological and physical equilibrium.

Article 3

To benefit from the correct sharing of all possible social resources and have specific provided support in case of disability.

Article 4

To be treated with all the rights accorded to people by law and social organizations.

Article 5

To be educated in economic and political subjects which will enable her to become a knowledgeable citizen.

Article 6

To be informed and educated about everything related to health, including sex and the reproductive aspects, with particular regard to gender-focused medicine which aims at her specific needs during childhood and adolescence.

Article 7

To benefit from positive support of family, school, health and social services in order to be able to face the physical and emotional changes occurring during puberty

Article 8

To be included in official statistics in which data must be reported separately according to gender and age

Article 9

Not to be targeted or used as an instrument in publicity in defense of tobacco, alcohol, harmful substances in general or any other campaign which could give her a negative image or offend her dignity.